Unacceptable Working Conditions in Global Fishing: Lawlessness, Criminality, or Enabling Policies and Political Economies?

Recent academic research and NGO/union campaigns have shown how working conditions in fisheries are often unacceptable, not only in Asia, but around the world, and in both coastal and distant water fisheries. Melissa Marschke and Peter Vandergeest assess the common explanations for this situation, and review policies that could improve working conditions by reducing worker vulnerability and facilitating worker collective action.

V2V THEMATIC WEBINAR SERIES 2022

Speakers:

Melissa Marschke

Dr. Melissa Marschke is a Professor at the School of International Development and Global Studies at the University of Ottawa. Her training is in human-environment relations, with an emphasis on livelihoods, social-ecological complexity, and resource governance. She is currently conducting research on precarious work across the seafood sector, as well as sand livelihoods.

Peter Vandergeest

Dr. Peter Vandergeest is Professor Emeritus of Geography at York University. He has been conducting research on livelihoods among marginalized resource users in Southeast Asia since the 1980s. His current research concerns working conditions among migrant workers in industrial fisheries.
