The Words We Need For The Ocean We Share: New Concepts For The Viability of Small-scale Fisheries

Milena Arias Schreiber uses a justice lens to illustrate how new concepts are needed to describe the experiences of the small-scale fisheries people in living under multiple pressures including blue growth and blue economy. She examines how some of the new concepts can contribute to strengthening the viability of small-scale fisheries. Departing from the origin of the term Blue Justice, Dr. Schreiber will show how concepts can be co-produced through transdisciplinarity processes and what contributions they can bring to the future ocean discourses. Her presentation is based on a recent co-authored article in Marine Policy focusing on “Blue Justice and the co-production of hermeneutical resources for small-scale fisheries”.

V2V THEMATIC WEBINAR SERIES 2022

Speaker:

Dr. Milena Arias-Schreiber

Milena Arias Schreiber is a Marine Social Sciences Researcher at the School of Global Studies in the University of Gothenburg, Sweden. She is holder of a Marie Skłodowska-Curie fellowship at the Department of Applied Economics (EqualSea lab) in the University of Santiago de Compostela, Spain. Her research has focused on the values and governance of small-scale fisheries in the Baltic Sea, the social dimensions of ecosystem-based management and fishers' job satisfaction and motivations to fish. With colleagues from Sweden, she is studying the potential of seafood relocalization and pluriactivity for the valorization of small-scale fisheries in coastal rural development. In Spain, she is working on the identification and analysis of socio-cultural contributions to coastal communities of on-foot shellfish collectors Galician women.
