Transformations Towards Ocean Equity and Blue Justice

Transformations towards ocean equity and blue justice are needed to address the inequitable distribution of access to ocean benefits and resources, as well as disproportionate exposure to harms. Yet, actions that fundamentally restructure relationships between people and oceans are highly political and can produce substantial risks for coastal communities and the marine environment. This seminar explores recent scholarship and practice on navigating this critical and complex space.

V2V THEMATIC WEBINAR SERIES 2022

Speaker:

Dr. Jessica Blythe

Dr. Jessica Blythe is an assistant professor with the Environmental Sustainability Research Centre at Brock University. Jessica is an environmental social scientist with expertise in resilience and sustainability science. At the broadest scale, her research aims to understand how communities perceive and respond to social-ecological change (including climate change), and their differential capacities for adaptation and transformation. One branch of Jessica's empirical work is grounded in coastal systems, where she draws on complexity and commons theory to explore the influence of social-ecological dynamics on resource management and livelihood outcomes. The second strand of her empirical work focuses on transformations towards sustainability. Over the past decade, she has worked with communities and colleagues in Australia, Canada, Malawi, Mozambique, and Solomon Islands.
